7 Acknowledgments

I would like to express my deepest gratitude to the following people and groups, without whom this project would have been impossible.

Thanks to Mary Regan, Josh Beckmann, Noah Swartz, and Kendra Moyer for putting enough faith in me to devote some of your vocational livelihood to this. I hope I was a fair and friendly boss, even though we didn't operate non-hierarchically.

Thanks to the six brave co-ops who agreed to participate in this project. You put your trust, time, and energy into supporting my work, for which I'm grateful.

Thanks to Eric French Monge for joining me in the earliest stages of conception and development of what became InterTwinkles, and to Becky Hurwitz for early moral support. And the rest of the codesign 2012 seminar who helped trial early prototypes.

Thanks to all of the groups and people who participated in design workshops in Boston, Providence, and elsewhere. Particular thanks to North American Students of Cooperation for inspiring me to dedicate myself to non-hierarchicalism and consensus, and the Boston Collective House Assembly, whose members entertained my crazy thoughts about cluster organizing and online tools.

Thanks to all the members of AORTA – in particular kiran nigam and Esteban Kelly, whose deep experience and valuable insights into group work have enormously influenced this work and my outlook on life.

Thanks to my adviser, Chris Schmandt, for putting up with me for these 6 years. Without your trust and support I would never have been here.

Thanks to Sasha Costanza-Chock for advising this project from its humble beginnings in your codesign class. And especially thanks for helping to keep the social justice frame front and center throughout the work – a much needed booster to ward off techno-centric positivism.

Thanks to Sep Kamvar for helping me to break out of the narrative ruts that I forged myself into while writing the dissertation.

Thanks to Ethan Zuckerman and Lorrie LeJeune for supporting me as a full member of the Center for Civic Media, administration be damned. I felt proud to be a member of the group; you made me feel welcome there. Thanks also to Chris Csikszentmihalyi, who got me started on this path.

Thanks to Ricardo Dominguez for helping me to think past the boxes of traditional research warrants, and inspired an attitude toward art that I still strive to emulate.

Thanks to Denise Cheng and Jeffrey Warren who selflessly donated their design skills to help InterTwinkles get its distinctive look and feel.

Thanks to Molly Sauter, Erhardt Graeff, Chris Peterson, Willow Brugh, and Ed Platt for the best kind of critical feedback throughout the project. Late night consults around the civic table were a joy with your presence. Thanks to Nathan Matias for that plus invaluable help in designing the Flame War card game and thinking about server architectures. Thanks to Drew Harry, Finn Brunton, Benjamin Mako Hill, Jérôme Hergueux, and Andrei Boutyline for valuable help with the discussion of ideas and critiquing drafts.

Thanks to the Speech + Mobility group members Andrea Colaço, Misha Sra, Hye-Soo Yang, Wu-Hsi Li, and Jaewoo Chung for helping with practice talks and critiques.

Thanks to Carl McLaren and Benjamin Sugar for holding down the fort at Between the Bars while I was too preoccupied to help out.

Thanks to my love Laura Burkle for putting up with me during the trials and tribulations of dissertating, as well as lending your adviserly insight and critical reading.

Thanks to Voqal and the Media Ideation Fellowship for believing enough in this work to give it financial support and mentorship.